

The 5 Ways UK Businesses Overpay On Waste

Most businesses overpay on waste not because of volume — but because of how it's classified, contracted, and managed.

If any of these apply to your business, there is likely recoverable cost sitting in your current waste spend — without changing your service provider.

1 Waste Streams Going Into The Wrong Bins

20–30% extra per lift

Mixed loads attract general waste pricing even when cheaper-rated streams are available — most businesses overpay on every collection without realising it.

2 Food Waste In General Bins

£60–£150 per bin/yr

Separate food waste saves £60–£150 per 1,100L bin per year. Most businesses pay general waste rates on material that qualifies for a much cheaper stream.

3 Unchecked Contractor Rates

15–25% above tender

Out-of-contract rates typically run 15–25% above benchmarked pricing. Most businesses haven't reviewed their waste contract in over 2 years.

4 Missing Waste Transfer Notes

Regulatory exposure

Every non-hazardous transfer requires a Waste Transfer Note. Most businesses have gaps in their records — which creates real exposure if the Environment Agency comes calling.

5 No Simpler Recycling Compliance Plan

Legal from April 2025

From April 2025, UK businesses must separately collect food waste, dry recyclables, and residual waste. Most don't have a written compliance plan — and don't know they're already behind.
